

I came to know Dicksie in the late fifties. By the time his financial situation was far from good.

One of his favourite watering holes was Paddy Hussey's bar which, ironically, was one of the cornerstones of the old Meredith estate in Castleisland Town.

Ever the gentleman, Dicksie had the nicest way of letting one know that he had no money but was still thirsty.

I treated him to the occasional pint but, had I known then what I know now of the generosity and benevolence of his ancestors, I might have been more generous.

The following story is told of the evening when Dicksie was walking home from Castleisland, slightly under the weather. He encountered the P.P. of Killeentredia who was himself well known to be more than partial to the drop. The P.P. accosted Dicksie with the words, "Drunk again to-day Dicksie!" Quick as a flash, Dicksie replied, "So am I, Father!"

HOK
1839-1912
He was the son of Richard Meredith and Mary Huggard of Kilarney. Stephen John was Dicksie's father. He was a protestant. He converted to marry a Catholic named Shannon. Dicksie worked in as a bank clerk. Dicksie married 1973 Paddy Fleming bought Parkmore in 1973. from his Aunt Margaret Margaret + Dicksie moved to Tralee where they lived at 23 Racecourse Road.

Margaret died in Dicksie died in

Some Merediths still living in Canada (Paddy Fleming)

Dicksie's grave was buried in The last Meredith in Dicksie's grave was Tommy.

{ Both houses feature in The Houses of Kerry.
I wonder did Richard build the road from Castleisland-Abbeyfeale

068
22558

006 only one Meredith (Meredith) Les of Ballygrenan